

Watch out for the latest package delivery scams!

A community of friends enjoying enriched, vibrant and independent lives together

Heads up I'On At Home members,

I've always considered myself to be very aware of security issues with the internet and how to avoid being scammed. Well, last week I let my guard down and almost got caught.

I was expecting several deliveries for on-line orders when I received a voice mail with a call back number letting me know that one of the parcels was being held at the sorting facility due to an address question. Shortly after, a text message popped up with a "tracking link" to click in order to correct the address issue. I was about to click on it, when I saw that the link had misspelling error.

Checking the Federal Communications Commission website shows that package delivery scams have become a big problem. Thieves pose as the US Postal Service, FEDEX and UPS and use logos, phrases and page layouts that closely mimic the real services.

Here's a helpful link (yes, you can click on it..I promise it's real!) from the FCC on how to identify and avoid package delivery scams.

Stay safe, it's a jungle out there!
